Read More Diane Abbott, the shadow international development secretary, said it was important not to use the report to "score political points" and insisted some of the recommendations would lead to "a greater burden on families" and are not affordable. Ms Abbott added that the Labour Party's position was "not to vote to cut back on world aid, but to ensure it is spent effectively". Responding to the report, a Foreign Office spokesperson said: "The UK remains the second largest bilateral donor and we continue to work with our partners to make sure aid is better used and reaches the most vulnerable." A spokesperson for International Development Secretary Priti Patel, added: "Our own analysis shows that only a quarter of the money spent on aid actually reaches poor people, and that by the time we've got our hands on it, it's often too late for the good it 82157476af
